

Nancy Anthone (Belgium)

As a child I was very creative. Drawing, painting, sculpting, I enjoyed them all. But in school things changed. Science captured my heart, so I decided to study medicine. In 2001 I graduated with great distinction from the Free University of Brussels in general medicine. I enjoyed working as a family practitioner for years, but when I took my first steps in aesthetic medicine in 2012 I knew... this is my thing. It is the perfect combination of my two passions, science and art. In 2019 I made the decision to quit my general practice and focus on aesthetic medicine only. Since then I've also become intrigued by Androgenetic Alopecia. I'm working hard on creating an effective treatment plan that can help both men and women suffering from hair loss.

I have a post graduate degree from Queen Mary University of London and regularly attend refresher courses and conferences to stay up to date.
