Janine Hopkins, M.D., F.A.A.D. is a board-certified dermatologist and experienced physician practicing in Monroe, LA since 1996. Dr. Hopkins opened her first private practice immediately after completing her specialty training. After four years of medical school at LSUMC, Shreveport and a one year internal medicine internship at Ochsner Hospital, New Orleans, Dr. Hopkins received training in the field of dermatology through a progressive and competitive residency program with an emphasis on surgical and cosmetic dermatology at LSU School of Medicine in New Orleans.

After 25 years of solo practice, Dr. Hopkins decided to expand her clinic. In May 2021, she opened a second location in Southlake, TX offering the same state-of-the-art unique treatments in her new location that she offers in her primary practice. These treatments include IGSRT, a non-surgical cure for skin cancer, innovative laser treatments for skin rejuvenation, acne, psoriasis and vitiligo, as well as her advanced cosmetic dermatology injection techniques she refers to as the “Trinity of Anti-Aging.”

In addition to seeing patients and running her two private practices, in 2019, Dr. Hopkins invented a medical device, CuraCator™ designed to improve safety and control for patients and clinicians when applying therapeutic products to skin. She is founder of the parent company, Trinnovations, that now manufactures and sales CuraCator™ devices to clinics in the U.S. and abroad.

Dr. Hopkins enjoys traveling as she lectures and teaches at U.S. and international medical meetings in her field of dermatology. “I enjoy meeting colleagues from all over the globe when learning and teaching on topics in my specialty. It is always exciting to share knowledge and experience with other healthcare professionals.”

Dr. Hopkins is a member of the American Academy of Dermatology, Women’s Dermatological Society, and past secretary/treasurer of the Louisiana Dermatological Society; she also served as the past state chair for the Dermatology Foundation, and is an active member of the Louisiana Medical Society, LDS Advocacy Committee, Texas Medical Society, American Society of Dermatological Surgery, and the Ouachita Medical Society.

Dr. Hopkins has been recognized by her patients in her hometown as “Top Doc” and also by New Beauty Magazine as a top doctor and expert injector.

Dr. Hopkins has been blessed to have the long term support of her husband of 30 plus years, two wonderful children and countless friends, family members and patients whom put their trust in her.
